

Dear Members of the FCC:

I am writing to urge you not to make proposed rule changes that currently regulate media ownership. These changes will have the effect of allowing a few companies to buy up smaller media outlets which will surely limit what our citizenry will be able to read in the newspaper, hear on the radio and see on television.

The point of journalism is to provide information, not politically controlled propaganda, for an informed democracy so that the citizens can govern themselves.

The people understand the dangers inherent in the rule changes, but apparently the politically-appointed Federal Communications Commission does not. If they did, the FCC would draw conclusions from the MASSIVE opposition expressed by the people themselves and heed their warnings concerning Big Brother political control over the media.

Anne Hummel
Greensboro, NC